The next step is to discuss it with the client, and getting their honest response over it without force-convincing them. JVR Consultants advises budding entrepreneurs to adapt themselves to the SWOT (Strength, Weakness, Opportunity and Threat) analysis, but with minor modification as OWTS, right from the start of their career to up-skill themselves. Instead of relying on the company's sponsorship, they should have budget for themselves and CSRs. In order to make the ecosystem beneficial for sustained business progress, one should appoint all the contributors aptly.

JVR suggests look out of the box and not confine to the personal choices and strengths for business. They urge consistent diversification via business continuity plans and policies for progress. Gear up your company for the numerous opportunities open in the market. And to seize these opportunities, identifying the hurdles on the path is vital. They prefer devising a mitigation strategy to tackle these challenges. JVR believes in turning the things on opposite side in favor; to retain them as strengths to win the opportunities. And then, "Success will be the only word known to such an organization."
